The content is extracted from the webpage code shown on the bottom half of the panel, therefore some web design experience comes in handy for identifying text blocks easier. A search function is provided, though. From this point on, a small notification (with sound enabled) pops up from the bottom-right corner of the desktop whenever updates are detected. Clicking the link immediately opens the webpage. WebMon offers support for webpage imports from Internet Explorer favorites and HTML bookmarks (from any web browser), along with exports and imports to WebMon format. In addition, you can minimize the tool to the system tray area, edit existing monitors and toggle their status, copy addresses to the Clipboard, use a search function to find listed URLs, view log details (TXT, XML or HTML), check all or selected pages immediately, as well as view monitor properties on a selected webpage (e.g. checksum, status). As far as program preferences are concerned, you can disable popup alerts or change their position on screen, disable sounds, execute a command line on new updates, enable logging, adjust the connection and transfer timeout, use proxies, set the default time interval, and so on. WebMon barely uses CPU and RAM, so it doesn't affect overall performance. It does not interrupt normal user activity either. We have not come across any issues in our tests. Although it's not the most resourceful webpage monitoring tool available today (e.g. Webmonit), it does a pretty good job, considering it's free to use. RuggedApplication 2018.10.10 The only reason to buy this is because it's the latest version of WebMon but it's not good. First off the version number is 5.5.0. b7e8fdf5c8

What's New in the WebMon?

WebMon is a free, open-source, cross-platform software developed by Oliver Kreylos. The tool allows you to check if new web pages have been modified, deleted, or added (clicked or refreshed). It provides a summary of new data in an easy-to-follow tabbed format: URLs, dates, descriptions, and check-up actions (e.g. open or verify) are displayed in a well-organized manner. WebMon allows you to add a new monitor by manually specifying its URL and a check-up interval (in minutes, hours, and days). It is also possible to create a link to a webpage (e.g. your favorite news website) which is opened in the user's web browser at the time of the monitor's activation. Alternatively, you can use a search bar to find a webpage using search term provided by you. This feature is helpful if you want to be notified of site changes for specific content (banner ads, new articles, footer links, etc.). The tool can be used from Windows, Linux, and Mac OS X systems. Although the interface is not particularly intuitive, WebMon is simple to navigate. A search box is available for locating specified pages and a file import utility for copying addresses to clipboard. The content is extracted from the webpage code shown on the bottom half of the panel and so, some web design experience comes in handy for identifying text blocks easier. A text tool is also provided for a quick comparison of HTML pages. WebMon supports the following options:

- Add monitor: Add a new webpage monitor by specifying the address, description, and check-up time frame.
- Edit monitor: Enter the desired URL into the URL field and update it. The URL will be removed from the list if no new entry is specified and another one will be added in its place.
- Copy monitor: Copy the current monitor's URL to the clipboard.
- Import monitor: Paste the address of a website manually into the URL field.
- Export monitor: Export the current monitor's URL and save it to a text, XML, or HTML file.
- Log monitor: Add a new monitor for logging the page's modifications, updates, and changes.
- Search monitor: Find a webpage using a search term entered by you.
- Toggle monitor: Turn this monitor on or off.
- View log: View monitor details: URL, address, date, description, and check-up time
